At the Faculty of Law and Political Science – 19 March 1962, we see the university not only as a place of learning, but as a space for reflection, growth, and shared responsibility. Postgraduate studies and scientific research are not just academic objectives — they are a commitment to the future, to society, and to knowledge with impact.

Our faculty is dedicated to supporting our students and researchers at every stage of their journey, providing an environment where curiosity is nurtured, ideas are valued, and ambitions are encouraged. Behind every research project lies a unique perspective, and it is our role to help bring those ideas to life through guidance, collaboration, and academic integrity.

Rooted in our local context and fully aware of our national mission, we also remain open to the world. Through academic partnerships and international cooperation, we work to offer broader horizons and opportunities for innovation and exchange.

As Vice-Dean, I remain deeply committed to building a faculty that is inclusive, forward-thinking, and grounded in academic excellence.

Together — students, faculty, staff, and partners — we can shape a vibrant and responsible academic community that contributes meaningfully to both knowledge and society.
